Old dog, new trick; sustained faster growth ahead

Berenberg forecasts for average GDP growth (2017-19) versus six-year average

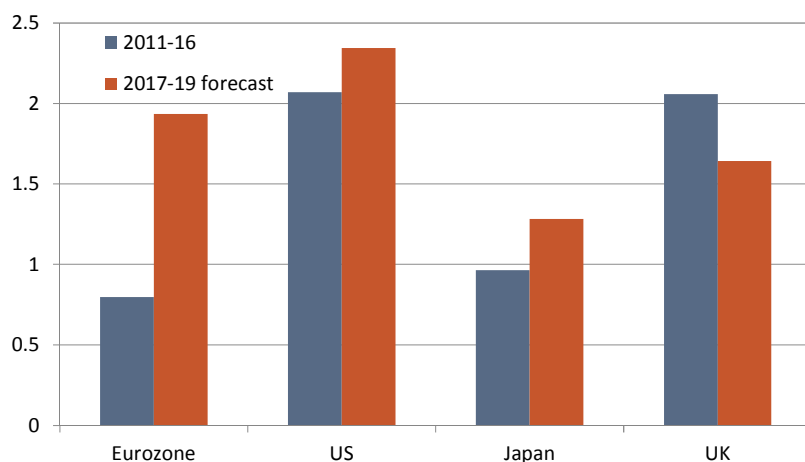

Chart shows average annual real GDP growth. Source: Eurostat, Bureau of Economic Analysis, Cabinet Office of Japan, Office of National Statistics, Berenberg calculations and forecasts

- Stability breeds confidence: Slowly, but surely, the post-Lehman age of caution is ebbing away. In major parts of the advanced world, rising profits, trade and investment are set to underpin a modest acceleration in real GDP growth over the medium term – see chart. After seven years of recovery that had occasionally been punctured by the euro crisis, a hiccup in emerging markets, major gyrations in oil prices and political shocks on both sides of the Atlantic – think Trump and Brexit – households and companies in advanced economies are increasingly confident that the recovery will continue.
- Expansions do not die of old age: The mere fact that we have not had a recession for a while is no reason to expect one soon. If economies over-invest, raise too much inventory or run up too much debt, a cleansing recession is needed to correct the excesses. But while households and companies, borrowers and investors have been more cautious over the past seven years than they were before, major economies are still far away from the excesses that could require a correction. The dog may be old, but it is far from exhausted, to use a canine metaphor for the recovery.
- Things can sometimes get better: Due to the pause induced by the euro crisis in 2011-2012, the Eurozone recovery is less advanced than in the US or the UK. The Eurozone can thus enjoy the strongest acceleration of major advanced economies as it puts idle resources back to work and reaps the benefits of pro-growth reforms. We expect Eurozone growth to average 2% per year from 2017 to 2019, well above its 1.5% trend rate and the meagre 0.9% average over the past six years. Modest fiscal and supply-side reform can help the US to raise growth by 0.2ppt to 2.3%. Even Japan can accelerate by 0.3ppt to around 1.3% pa as global conditions improve and some recent modest reforms pay off.
- In the UK, Brexit already hurts: While the short-term risks to demand since the Brexit vote have not materialised in a serious way, the outlook for the UK would be much better without Brexit. Until 2016, the UK had one of the strongest post-Lehman recoveries of all advanced economies. Because of Brexit uncertainty and the hit to real incomes from the weaker sterling, UK real GDP growth is set to decelerate from its 2% six-year average to 1.6% over the medium term. Without Brexit, the UK economy would probably be enjoying growth similar to the US instead. In the long run, we expect Brexit to reduce the UK's potential growth to 1.8% pa, well below its pre-Brexit rate of 2.2%.
- We see three key risks to our positive outlook: 1) Advanced economies could be drawn into a major conflict either in the Middle East or east Asia; 2) China's growing debt troubles could come to a head sooner rather than later; and 3) a misdirected and excessive US fiscal stimulus could cause the US to overheat and bring the cycle to an early end. While we need to watch such risks, we attach only a small or very small probability to each of them for now.
- Central banks will not spoil the party either: Because demand is accelerating only gradually, companies should be able to augment supply quickly enough through investment, hiring and training without raising prices sharply. While underlying inflationary pressures remain modest, central banks will continue to keep their economies off their leashes to avoid running the risk of choking off the upswing. This dog might be old, but it still has strong legs.
